

CHAPTER 4

THE CHURCH IN THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY

In this century the papacy became dominant over all of western Europe, fulfilling the dreams of Gregory VII.

A. The papacy in the thirteenth century strongest ever over the nations; able to carry out earlier claims (e.g., by Gregory VII)

most powerful under Innocent III; continued during most of century until Celestine V (1294)

but always difficult to enforce papal claims (more than ten major excommunications) began to lose power under Boniface VIII at end of century, while making even more sweeping claims during this century, papacy became more and more a state power, using military force (cf. Albigensian Crusade and the Inquisition)

1. Innocent III (ruled 1198-1216)

most powerful pope of all; no king able to resist him; produced 1198 bull, "Moon and Sun" edict relating the king and the pope (see Bettenson)

Innocent dictated the personal fortunes and lives of most of the kings and important people in Europe:

controlled family struggle for German emperorship forced French king to take back first wife when he had married another

*1215, important year:

*Fourth Lateran Council, called and presided over by Innocent III:

○ The "Great Council" (12th Ecumenical Council)

- Attended by many bishops, eastern patriarchs, and monarchical reps

○ 60+ canonical actions

- used term "transubstantiation"
- Primacy of the pope followed by Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, Jerusalem

- Call for Greeks to reunite under the Roman church
- approved Dominicans and Franciscans
- started crusade against Albigenses and Waldenses
- established Inquisition

1215: England's Magna Carta

an early development in constitutional rule, it has been described as “the greatest constitutional document of all times—the foundation of the freedom of the individual against the arbitrary authority of the despot”

- King John in England
 - 1) tried to keep bishoprics open, appropriating the revenue for himself,
 - 2) for a long time the king delayed approval of Stephen Langton as the new archbishop of Canterbury, although elected in Rome
(*Langton was the one who first divided the Bible into chapters)
- 1208, Innocent had used new weapon against King John, the interdict (no Roman Catholic services allowed in country), to force him to approve Langton as archbishop of Canterbury; excommunicated King John in 1209, declared him deposed in 1212; John officially apologized and recognized the pope's claims in 1213
- these actions, added to other lapses, produced more hostility between King John and the English barons (and Langton too), which finally resulted in his being forced to sign the Magna Carta in 1215 (see related documents in Bettenson)
- Innocent III opposed the de-centralizing shift introduced by the Magna Carta (see Schaff, History of the Christian Church 5:172-173)

2. St. Celestine V (1294), the Hermit Pope

one of the two “saint” popes of the thirteenth century (the other one, Gregory X)

1292, Gaetani family struggling to control papacy; in 1294, after an interregnum, the family fetched from the mountains an old Benedictine hermit named Peter; he took name Celestine V

Celestine 79 years old; amazed, perplexed, incompetent; believed every counselor; controlled mostly by king of Naples, where he stayed became discouraged: “O God, while I rule over other men's souls, I am losing the salvation of my own.”

decided to abdicate; this against wishes of counselors; (probable story) Cardinal Gaetani (to be Boniface VIII) whispered to him through a wall by a reed, “Heaven wills that you resign” abdicated, on the ground “of his humbleness, the quest of a better life and an easy conscience, on account of his frailty of body and want of knowledge, the badness of men, and a desire to return to the quietness of his former estate”

Gaetani elected: declared abdication permissible for popes (n.b., Benedict XVI’s abdication in 2013), overturned all other policies of Celestine, and imprisoned him till death

3. Boniface VIII (Gaetani, 1294-1303)

*“came in like a fox, ruled like a lion, died like a dog”; feuded with Dante who, in his Divine Comedy, placed this pope in the 8th level of hell with the simoniacs incarcerated old Celestine V in cell in castle until he died two years later got involved with war between England and France, especially when they both wanted all their money to stay in their countries (to finance the war)

tried to imitate Innocent III:

1296, bull Clericis Laicos, forbids taxation of clergy that targets English king Edward I (see Bettenson)

*1302, bull Unam Sanctam, places himself over all people on earth, particularly targeting French king Philip IV (see Bettenson) end of bull: “Furthermore we declare, state, define and pronounce that it is altogether necessary to salvation for every human creature to be subject to the Roman pontiff.”

Philip IV of France sent agents to seize Boniface; papal palace at Anagni plundered, Boniface imprisoned, but freed by friends; died a few weeks later

B. Albigensian crusade in southern France (1208-1229)

Neo-Manicheanism’s dualistic denigration of matter challenged the orthodox doctrine of incarnation

Cathari (“pure”) widely spread in Europe but centered around town of Albi, France; dualistic, higher morality and some “perfected”; opposed to established church

ca. 1200, Innocent III called on Count Raymond of Toulouse to root out this heresy by force; Raymond said impossible; Innocent excommunicated Raymond; troops gathered against him; Raymond repented, was whipped

1209-1214, huge killings, ruined the south of France; nobles from Normandy took Raymond's territory

Fourth Lateran Council of 1215 approved and demanded continuation of this merciless crusade (Bettenson)

C. Mendicant orders

1. Introduction

one of the two most important developments in history of monasticism; mendicari means “to beg”

beforehand, monks had entered orders for the good of their own souls; now, monks try to affect the world

many new orders being formed at this time, two hundred by time of Innocent III; Innocent forbade any new orders in order to promote a common voice for the church, but with the founding of monastic schools leading to establishment of the universities (Bologna, Salerno, Paris), it became increasingly difficult for the papacy to keep control the increasing numbers of new church institutions but Innocent at Fourth Lateran Council did approve two more; Innocent had had a dream: Lateran walls falling, two monks holding them up, an Italian and a Spaniard

new monks called “friars” (French “brothers”)

2. Dominican order

Dominic de Guzman (1170-1221)

from influential Spanish family; when ten to twenty years old, he studied in monastery; came to favor public work; felt Albigenses could be converted by preaching more than by crusades and other orders; 1215, requested approval for new order approved by Innocent III and Fourth Lateran Council; popes shrewdly tied this order to themselves: services, confession, etc. —not under bishops but directly responsible to pope

*order's main purpose: 1) teach, 2) combat heresy; placed in charge of inquisition against Cathari, “hounds of God”; called Order of Preachers (O.P.); wear black robes

3. Franciscan order

Giovanni di Pietro di Bernardone (d'Assisi), a.k.a., Francis (1182-1226)

from wealthy Italian merchant family (silk); carefree youth, nicknamed “the Frenchman” by his father; genius, but not happy; read Bible, saw difference between Jesus and prelates; not interested in education; had vision: marriage to Poverty; very kind, even to animals (preached to birds, pigs, etc.)

Never ordained as a priest, he started an order of lesser brothers and received approval from Innocent III; wanted order to work, or beg if necessary, preach, take care of sick and poor; order not to have property (see Rule of St. Francis, Bettenson); Francis became known as “Il Poverello—the Impoverished;” introduced use of the rosary and Christmas nativity creche order outgrew his control, became more worldly under new vicar-general; Francis abdicated leadership in 1223, spent rest of life in quiet retirement; supposedly received “stigmata,” punctured hands and feet as signs of cross two years before he died pope and others changed direction of this order; gifts given to pope “to use” for the order (thus pope controlled order); finally in next century pope John XXII gave property to the order

two Franciscan factions: Conventuals (wanted property), and Observants (followed Francis); finally divided into two orders called Order of Minor Brothers (O.F.M.); wear brown robes

4. Women’s orders leading to spread of nunneries both Dominicans and Franciscans had auxiliary orders for women; e.g., Franciscan group started by Clara, called “Poor Claras”; never were any women Jesuits

5. Tertiates

“third level” for laymen’s groups interested in occasionally helping established orders; called “conversi,” they took no vows but helped with monastery chores and attended services

6. Other orders

many started in twelfth and thirteenth centuries

- Augustinians

Re-initiated in thirteenth century; tried to revive rule of Augustine which had ceased after Muslim conquest of north Africa; scholarly pursuits

- Premonstrants

similar to Augustinians, started at Premontre, France; strongest in England and Germany, the Reformation reached many of them

- Carmelites

first evidence in 1185 at Mt. Carmel; dating from crusades; supposedly “founded by Elijah”

7. Conditions of the friars great variation, even within same order (esp. Franciscans); some—wealth, scholars, power; others—poor, despised; moral declension apparent in most orders, causing “reform” orders tremendous growth in thirteenth century; e.g., 8,000 Franciscan houses by middle of century

many ecclesiastics introduced to education through these orders

D. The inquisition began with Innocent III in 1215 after Albigensian crusade; Dominicans put in charge legal abuses of inquisition:

- secret accusations
- arrest and trial without due process
- no lawyer permitted
- not permitted to face accuser
- no witnesses
- punished with or without confession
- terrible tortures

church could only torture, not put to death; victims turned over to “secular power” for death (usually burning); thus Roman Catholic apologists later blame the civil authorities

[for “justification” of the Inquisition, see Aquinas in Bettenson]

E. Scholars of the thirteenth century

The thirteenth century saw the high point of scholasticism. The increase in learning, spurred on by the new orders, produced a crop of extremely gifted thinkers and writers, who dedicated their lives to examining the philosophy of Christianity and the fine points of faith (and for some, science).

While most of them rejected the idea of inductive reasoning and the role of evidence, through rational dialectic discussion they built great systems of thought on tradition and philosophy in defense of Christian dogma.

This century's scholasticism lays the foundation for the coming Renaissance.

1. Roger Bacon (1214-1294)

(not Francis Bacon, seventeenth century)

English Franciscan scholar; studied and taught in Oxford and Paris; studied language, science, philosophy; had extremely valuable book collection considered to be three centuries ahead of his time; this inductive scholastic rejected deductive scholasticism for the experimental method; advanced studies in lenses and mirrors believed in study of the Bible in original languages to help understand nature not appreciated, held in suspicion by many; his experiments considered Satanic; at one point arrested and imprisoned by his own order

2. Albertus Magnus (1193-1280)

German Dominican scholar; mastered whole corpus of Aristotle; wrote twenty-one massive volumes on Aristotle, including reconciliation of natural science and philosophy with Christianity probably the most learned and well-read man in the thirteenth century; universally recognized expressed high praise for Mary and taught her "immaculate conception"

3. Thomas Aquinas (1225-1274)

Italian Dominican; student of Albertus Magnus; greatest philosopher and theologian of Middle Ages: called the "Angelic Doctor" (for his interest in angels) and the "Dumb Ox" (for his ponderous methods) taught that Mary had original sin (denied immaculate conception of Mary); taught the idea of "progressive justification" taught all over Europe; ultimate exponent of natural theology, based on categories of Aristotle wrote Summa Theologica; his Contra Gentiles was an apologetic work based on natural theology intended to train missionaries to the Turks died at age of 48 (Dante said he was poisoned)

4. Bonaventura (1221-1274)

Italian, John of Fidanza; age four, sick, prayed for by Francis of Assisi, recovered, named “O Good Fortune” (“O Bona Ventura”); became Franciscan; worked way up to be head of Franciscans

This godly prince of the mystics rejected Aristotelianism; his teacher said, “Adam did not seem to have sinned in Bonaventura” famous commentary on the Sentences; he rejected immaculate conception of Mary

5. Duns Scotus (1270-1308)

Scottish Franciscan; separated faith from philosophy; used obscure wording, called the “Subtle Doctor”; not analytic and lucid, thus “duns” (“Dunce”) more critical than constructive; decline in reputation following his death; strongly defended immaculate conception beatified by Pope John Paul II in 1992; beatification is the 3rd of four steps toward sainthood. The beatified dead are in heaven and can intercede for the living who call upon their name.
